PAROQUET MINERAL WATER.

Resists and Manufacturing Chemists, have made arrangements with the proprietor of the Paroquet Springs for the sole privilege of taking from the Springs this celebrated Mineral Water.

It is put in glass immediately after it is taken from the Springs, whereby its freshness of flavor is preserved, enabling it to be kept for any length of time without losing is medical properties.

It is also grated and bottled, giving it a sparkling character and improved flavor, without altering in any degree its medicinal virtue.

This Water is considered, by those who have used it, second to no sulphur saline Mineral Water in the is especially useful in Dyspepsia, and sympathetic acid gas, and to the palate is as agreeable as lemonade where Manufactured and sold wholesale and retail bt. E. JENKINS & CO., Druggists and Manufacturin Chemists, Third and Wainut streets, and by Proggisthroughout the country. A liberal discount made believes.

Are You Sick! Then you can't be cured too soon. Don't delay until your complaint is incurable, and then mourn when it is too late. Four fifths of all the diseases which people the church yards might be cured by AYER'S CA-THARTIC PILLS, if taken in season. Don't go dragging through the spring, faint, sleepy, and listless, because your blood is loaded with bile. Don't wear the headache, heartburn, and their kindred disorders, because your stomach is foul. Don't parade yourself around 182 the world, covered with pimples, blotches, ulcers, sores, stomach and bowels need strengthing into healthy ac ion. Ayer's Pills set these things right as surely a water quenches fire. They purify the body and blood and restore their functions into healthy activity, which you can feel as quick as they are taken. They are the one great medical wonder of this age, recognized by all who know their virtues—and many thousands know them. Take the Cherry Pectoral for a cough, and the Pills for all derangements requiring a purga

"A SUBSCRIBER" (whom we suspect to have ome narrow-minded Leech) asks us why we advertise Dr. AYER'S Pille, and we will give him our seven reasons for so coing. The first, second, and third are, that we are paid for it. The fourth is, we know them by experience to be good. The fifth is, that Dr. Ayer's preparations being recommended by better men than we-by physicians of the highest talent and the deepest learning in the land-we are well sustained in our own conviction of their value. The sixth is, that they are cheap as well as useful. The last, but not least, is, that of their value. The sixth is, that they are cheep as well as useful. The last, but not least, is, that they have done and are doing an amount of good in this community which our old fogy friend, if he could repeat himself ten thousand times, neight never hope to equal, and we trust, by making them known, to render some service to our readers Great Work of Bayard Taylor!

THE MYSTIC BRIDE;

The Exiles of Manhattan A TALE OF NEW YORK IN THE OLDEN TIME.

BY SYLVANUS CORR. JP.

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1856 by Robert Bonner, in the Clerk's Office of the Dis-trict Court for the Southern District of New York. CHAPTER I.

THE OLD TAVERN, AND A SUSPICION FOR ITS INMATES. At the time of which we write, this Island Metropolis, tae foremost city of America, was in its swaddling clothes—a Dutch baby, small and weak, but of great promise—and bore the good cld name of New Amsterdam. The Dutch West India Company held the charter, and William Kieft was the Governor of the colony. The Indians were settled on all hands of the Dutch adventurers, and, under all the circumstances of the times, it is a won-der that there were not more troubles than there were. In the dark night the watchman of the pale faces, who chanced to stand upon an emi nence, could turn his gaze in no direction without meeting the dim light of the Indian's camp-fire. And so on all hands, save to the seaboard, the fires stretched away—from vale to vale, and from hill to hill—like beacon-lights of a great nation, bounded only by the wave-lashed shores of the continent.

Thus were the affairs of New Amsterdam at the time when our story opens. Some noble men had settled there, and they had brought their virtues with them; but bad men had come too; and so vice and crime reared their hydra heads in con-

It was a calm, pleasant day in July, in the year 1640. Close by the head of what is now known as Coenties Slip, stood the city tavern of New Amsterdam. It was a plain, wooden building, roofed with bark and straw, with a sort of garden in front, within which Nannette, my good hos-tes, had supposed only flowers would spring up; but at the present time she was not a little sur-prised to observe that where she had planted a "Queen's daisy" a huge pumpkin vine had made its appearance; and in the protty beds where she had sot her peens roots she had the mortification to see young cabbages springing up on all hands. Ah—the good old burgher and host, Jacob Van der Donck, had an eye to the profits of that bit of ground. And there he stood on this pleasant Juy day, with his hands clasped behind him, and his pipe in his mouth, complacently viewing the result of his gardening. He was a short, roundbodied man, some forty years of age, with a broad, humorous sace, and a calm, sly twinkle of the small grey eye, which denoted shrewdness and good nature when needed, and which at the same ime, seemed to indicate that he could be very sewere if occasion should require.

"Jacob Van der Donck," uttered his wife, aproaching him unobserved, "aren't you a pattern f sweetness and love?"

"Good Nannette," returned Jacob, with a smile, "It gives me great pleasure to answer such questions when put by your own sweet lips. I am."

"Yes—you are! Oh—yes. Of course you are. It was very kind of you to pull up my flowers. It was very kind of you to pull up my flowers. It was very kind of you to pull up my flowers. It was very kind of you to pull up my flowers. are. It was very kind of you to pull up my flowers and plant those cabbages, and pumpkins, and turnips, wasn't it? Very kind!"
"Certainly. What do we keep tavern for? Is it to see flowers? No. It's to feed the hungry-and what better sign, than food growing directly and what better sign, than food growing directly in front of our house? > "Look, Jacob," she whispered, starting close to her companion's side. "There is Casper Geldorp again, watching our house. What can he want? He was here yesterday in the same way, and so, too, on the day before. I don't like it."

The host turned as his wife spoke, and he saw second-story windows of the tavern; but the latter, as soon as he saw that he was noticed, moved quickly away, and was soon lost to sight by the turn of the street.

Within one of the chambers of the City Tavern for so the humble inn was called-sat Peter Van der Veer. He was a well-formed man, with a frame of medium size, and dressed in a garb which betrayed both wealth and good taste. He was near 21 years of age-tall, stout, and well-built, with light-brown hair and deep-blue eyes, and well-versed in all the athletic sports of the time. And his mental education was good, too. He had learned all the mysteries of trade, and made much proficiency in scholastic lore, and had thought some of accepting a place in the university of Amsterdam, whon his

"Ah—I didn't think of that," uttered the host.
"Yes, yes—he's just the man for that work. If any man in New Amsterdam would rob a helpless traveler, or steal the last stiver from its sleeping owner, then I do really believe Casper Geldorp is that man."

Willem could see no harm in answering those simple questions, so he did not hesitate. A short silence followed, and then Geldorpre "Let's see-if I remember rightly, your mother's name is Theodora.'

"It is," answered Willem.
"Well—I must make it in my way to call in and see your parents when I can spare the time. I suppose they will remain at the tavern for some time yet."

Willem said he thought it very likely, and then, as they had reached a point where a narrow sliey turned off towards Mill street, Geldorp remarked that his way ley in that direction, and having bowed very politely he turned off. When they reached the tavern the father and son went to their room, where Madame Van der Veer sat, and there the three talked the matter over. a servant, and he resolved now that he would do so at once. He concluded to engage the services of some shrewd, faithful fellow, in whom he could confide, and who could help him, physically, in the hour of need.

"I will go at once," he sail to his wife and son, and secure the man if such an one can be found. I shall let no one outside know that he is my se vant. If I can come across the one I sho he may be of great assistance to us. I now, and in the meantime you remain here." Van der Veer left the tavern and made his way to the fort, within which were the government offices. He was acquainted with the colonial secretary, Cornelis Van Teinhoven, and to him he went. Van der Veer stated his business, and at first Tienhoven shock his head, but at length he said perhaps it might be done.

"What would you pay the company for the exclusive services of one of their best negroes?" he asked.

"If on trial he proves to be such a man as I want REVIEW OF THE MARKET. I will pay whatever you say is right; or even wha you wish," returned the merchant.

The secretary thought awhile, and then told the old man to call in the morning.
"I will see Kieft, and if he is willing you shall which he sails semetimes. He pretends to be an have one; but mind you: You must not speak of honest trader, but I believe he makes more bargains with cold leaden bullets and sharp steel than would let out a slave thus we should be flooded Tiechoven seemed to hesitate at first, but he oon answered that he did.

"And what sort of a man is he?" the merchant "Well--I can't say as to that. He has proved nimself very serviceable in keeping off the Inany safe, konest people set them upon the dians, and we haven't bothered ourselves much concerning his general habits. The Governor finds such men very handy now and then." Peter Van der Veer went away with his opinion of Willem Kieft lowered a bit. He was aware that the Governor was unscrupulous in some matters, but he had no idea that he would shield a real criminal for the sake of his services. How didn't know it.

On the following morning, the merchant went again to the secretary's office, and he had the satisfaction of learning that he could have the man

"I have done for you what I would have done for no other man," said Tienhoven. "I have persuaded the governor to let you have Manuel de Rous. He is a faithful fellow if well treated, and will do all you could wish for one man to do. He has been at work very hard lately, and we have

He has been at work very hard lately, and we have concluded to give him a respite, seeing that we can do it without loss. You can have him by paying the company four florins a week and keeping him well."

Van der Veer readily promised this, and his servant was brought in. The old gentleman fairly started with astonishment when he saw the individual who was to serve him. He had seen larged men in his day, but never anything to come up to the man who now stood before him.

Manuel de Reas was a full-blooded Ashantee, who had been taken from Guinea by the Spaniards when a mere child, having been brought in among a lot of priseners from the interior. He had grown most astonishingly. He was now not far from 30 years of age, and was a very little over seven feet high, and large in proportion. His head was broad; his neck like a bull's; his breast and shoulders massive and nobly rounded, and his limbs all swelling with cord and muscle. He was known in New Amsterdam by the appellation of should he be watching us thus? Ah, I would ather never have seen him again. He surely known in New Amsterdam by the appellation of "The Giant," and the name was most appropriate. As soon as Van der Veer had assured himself that he huge mass was really human he instinctively turned his gaze upon the fellow's face; and he was pleased with the result. The skin was as black as black could well be, and the features were far more comely than those of most of the negroes whom Peter had seen. There was a kind, generous expression upon the sable countenance, and over all there gleamed a beam of intelligence which recommended him at once.

"Will you take him?" asked the secretary, with a smile.
"Will you serve me?" asked the old gentleman.

from choice," added Peter.
"Then you shall find me ready and willing, sir." The negro spoke this quickly, for his nice ear had detected already the natural goodness which gave tone to the old man's character. He had been watching his proposed master narrowly, and he appeared to be well satisfied.
"Now mind you, Manuel," said Tienhoven, as the negro was about to follow the merchant from the apartment, "we give you this opportunity be-cause you have been faithful, and you must remember that you are not to speak of your connexion with Mr. Van der Veer about the town."

The giant promised to obey the injunction, and en followed his master from the place. When hey reached the tavern the merchant gave direc-ions to the host to have Manuel's name entered upon his book, and then led the way to the cham-ber. The good matron was startled at the appear-ance of the chony Hercules, and had she not seen her husband with him, she would surely have aken him for one of the wandering geni of whom se had read in Oriental tales; but as it was she mickly recovered her assurance, and received her aw domestic acquisition with a warm smile.

At the end of half an hour, during which the aw-made companions conversed freely, the giant said within himself that he would serve these poo-

CONGRESSIONAL.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 6. SENATE. - The proceedings have been of an unmportant character. Mr. Seward introduced a bill, which was refer red to the Judiciary Committee, to provide for a change of venue in certain criminal cases now pending in the Courts of the United States for the Territory of Karsas. This is founded on the petition of Robinson and others, presented yester day.

Mr. Hunter moved to take up the army appro-Mr. Seward wanted to finish the internal improvement bills to-day.

Mr. Hunter insisted that the appropriation bills
